U.S. Denies a Visa To Soviet Attaché To Olympic Games

Compiled in Our Staff From Dispatches Department said Friday it had denied a visa to the Soviet attaché to sian was a high-ranking member of the Soviet secret police.

The department's spokesman.

John Hughes, said, "We found the individual in question to be unacceptable for this purpose."

Mr. Hughes said, "We have made a judgment in this case on grounds of internal security, and we don't think the internal security of the United States would be best served by having this particular gentleman operating for six months in Los Angeles."

A State Department official who asked not to be identified told The Associated Press that the Russian, Oleg N. Yermishkin, "was identified as a fairly high-ranking KGB official when he served as first secretary of the Soviet Embassy in Sources told the Los Angeles Times that in denying entry to Mr. Yermushkin, government officials cited a section of the Immigration and Nationality Act pertaining to aliens who "seek to enter the United States solely, principally or incidentally to engage in activities which would be prejudicial to the public interest or endanger the welfare, safety or security of the Unit-

> Mr. Ueberroth declined to speculate what effect, if any, the State Department decision would have on whether the Soviet Union chooses to participate in the Summer Games. Soviet participation is seen by committee members as crucial to the prestige and financial health of the Games.

There was no immediate reaction from the Soviet Union. On Jan. 19, Marat Gramov, president of the Soviet National Olympic Committee, complained at a Moscow news conference that the State Department was balking at granting entry to the attaché and warned, "When the State Department intervenes and tries to make us come to Los Angeles as they wish, we won't agree and we refuse to cooperate." Thursday, after first reports of the visa denial: "Frankly, we are puzzled by the length of time it took to make this decision. The timing is critical because of the short time remaining — about 20 weeks — before the 1984 Olympic Games."

But the State Department offi-cial told the AP that when the Soviet Union made its initial request for the six-month visa, "we told them in December, within days of their request, that there would be prob-lems." The official said the formal visa application was not submitted until Feb. 10 and was turned down on Feb. 28. "Eighteen days is not an exaggerated time in these mat-ters," the official said.

In Moscow, a U.S. Embassy official who asked not to be identified said Friday the Russians were warned in advance that Mr. Yermishkin would be denied a visa because of his "personal background," the AP reported.

House Panel Approves Tax Increase Of $49.3 Billion Over Next 4 Years

By Robert D. Hershey Jr. New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — The House Ways and Means Committee has approved $49.3 billion in tax increases over the next four years. including additional revenues from liquor, rigarettes and telephones. The committee, meeting Thursday, drafted a bill that will be an important part of the House's coninbution to the effort in both chambers of Congress to reduce the lederal budget deficit.

Although details of the committee's bill are subject to change on the floor of the House of Representatives and in conference with the Senate, its main elements are expected to be part of the legislation that will go to President Ronald

The committee met from 9 A.M. to just before midnight in an effort to achieve the goal of its Democratic chairman, Representative Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois, to produce $50 billion in new revenues. As the panel adjourned, Mr.

Rostenkowski said the bill "rests on solid bipartisan footing" and is "a first installment on an ever-increasing debt." He added, "Its impact falls on the upper reaches of the income scale — not the broad middle." The bill as approved by the committee, would increase the federal excise tax on alcoholic beverages, excluding wine and beer, by onethird. If the tax is entirely passed on to consumers, as seems likely, it will add about 79 cents to the retail price of a liter (1.06 quarts) of 80proof (40-degree) whiskey.

In addition, the committee voted to extend through 1987 the 3-percent extrise tax on telephone ser- on "windfall" profits from newly vice, now scheduled to expire at the discovered crude oil until the end

Plan May Affect Citizens Abroad

WASHINGTON — The House Ways and Means Com-mittee has voted to postpone three scheduled increases in the earned-income exclusion for Americans abroad, as part of a $49.3-billion deficit reduction package.

Under the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, Americans abroad can exclude up to $75,000 of 1982 income from federal income tax.

The exclusion is scheduled to rise to $80,000 for 1983 income, $85,000 for 1984, $90,000 for 1985 and $95,000 for 1986. The Ways and Means Committee proposal, if approved, would delay the 1984 increase to 1987, the 1985 increase to 1988 and the 1986 increase until 1989.

• A return to the pre-1981 law governing finance leasing, scheduled to be liberalized this year.

Senate Acts To Curb Reagan On Exports

By Stuart Auerbach

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON — The Senate has approved legislation giving the president far less authority than the Reagan administration had sought to control strategic exports to Soviet bloc nations.

But the bill, passed by voice vote late Thursday after 25 hours of debate over a four-day period, is far stronger than legislation passed last October by the House, setting up a confrontation in a conference expected to start within the next

The Senate and House bills attempted to strike a balance between two important considerations - U.S. national security concerns and needs for American businesses and farm groups to sell in overseas markets.

The Senate bill leans more toward national security concerns, while the House tilts in the direction of export sales.

The gap between the two bills, which extend the Export Administration Act, was considered so great that doubts have been raised on Capitol Hill about whether a compromise can be reached. The act, which expired Sept. 30. has been extended by temporary resointions. The latest extension expires March 31.

The Reagan administration reg-istered strong disagreement with at least five provisions of the bill passed by the Republican-controlled Senate. It has even stronger objections to the version passed by the Democratic-controlled House

The administration objects to Senate provisions that would curtail the president's power to instirute grain embargoes, affect a nuclear agreement with China that President Ronald Reagan is expected to sign during his visit to Beijing next month, and tighten controls on shipments of nuclear technology or components to countries that refuse to allow inspections of their atomic facilities.

Agother an endment, put ic-ward by Senator Jesse Helms, Republican of North Carolina, undercuts recent administration high technology to China. The administration efforts were credited by Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige with easing tensions between Washington and Beijing. The sharpest debate in the Senate occurred just before the bill's final passage. Senators Christopher J. Dodd, a Connecticut Democrat, and William L. Armstrong, a Colorado Republican, offered an amendment to remove businesssupported provisions of the bill restricting embargoes in cases of existing contracts.

The Dodd-Armstrong amendment was defeated, 65-21 Mr. Dodd argued that the amendment would strengthen the Senate bill in one of the few areas where it was weaker than the House-passed version.

Under the amendment, so-called contract sanctity provisions would not apply in cases of aggression, such as the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, terrorism, gross violations of human rights, or nuclear weapons tests.

Mr. Dodd said it would preserve the president's ability to apply sanctions as an element of U.S. foreign policy. Mr. Armstrong said that, by opposing the amendment, the Senate would be putting commercial interests ahead of a firm stand against human rights violations of terrorism. But Senator John Heinz, Republican of Pennsylvania, floor manager of the bill, cited Reagan administration opposition to the amendment and said it would label the United States as an unreliable

Chernenko Sees 'Turning Point' If U.S. Makes Positive Moves

By Dusko Doder Washington Post Service

MOSCOW — The new Soviet leader, Konstantin U. Chernenko. said Friday he was prepared for "a real turning point in Soviet-American relations" if the Reagan administration moved from its recent conciliatory statements to "real ac-

In his first policy speech since assuming power on Feb. 13, Mr. Chemenko cited several areas for such actions. These ranged from ratification by the United States of the underground nuclear test han treaty to achieving accords on a prohibition of anti-satellite weapons or chemical weapons.

Reaching an agreement on the above mentioned issues would signal the beginning of a real turning point in Soviet-American relations and in the international situation as a whole," Mr. Chernenko said. We would wish such a turning point: now it is up to Washington

The tone of Mr. Chernenko's speech was moderate and included no direct attacks on President Ronald Reagan and only a ritualistic slap at "extreme imperialist cir-cles" and "militaristic" policies.

Mr. Chernenko, who succeeded the late Yuri V. Andropov last month as general secretary of the Soviet Communist Party, pledged to continue his predecessor's domestic policies. He endorsed Mr. Andropov's economic reforms and his campaigns for discipline and Speculation rose here that Mr. Chernenko, as a close associate of the late President Leonid I. Brezhney, was more inclined to pursua East-West dialogue. Echoing Mr. Brezhney, who was the architect of Moscow's detente policies. Mr. Chernenko said that "detente has struck deep roots" and that it was still possible to improve the international climate.

The United States "escated obstacles to the talks on both European and strategic nuclear weapons by deploying their missies in Eu-rope," he said, "It is the removal of these obstacles — which would also remove the need for our countermeasures - that offers the way to working out a mutually acceptable

U.S. Tightens Limits on Pesticide EDB
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency, tightening its restraints on the cancer-causing agent ethylene dibromide, set interim standards Friday for residues of the pesticide in citrus fruits. The standard, which will take effect in 30 days, sets a tolerance level of 250 parts per billion for oranges, grapefruit and other citrus fruits. For the edible portions of those fruits, the standard is 30 parts per billion, the same level the agency set earlier this year for grain products, said William.

D. Ruckelshaus, the EPA administrator.

The new standards will apply to domestic and imported fruit, but not to U.S. exports. It will be left up to the importing countries to set their own standards. After Sept. 1, the Food and Drug Administration will ban the sale of any citrus fruits with detectable EDB residue.

Panel Rebuffs Reagan On Central America Aid

By Joanne Omang and John M. Goshko

Washington Pest Serrice WASHINGTON - A House subcommittee has severely criticized the administration's new Central American aid proposals. voting to cut military and economic aid requests, impose stiff conditions on the remaining funds and halt military exercises in Honduras.

In several party-line votes Thursday, the Democratic-controlled Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs rejected most of the $8-billion program of the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America, which President Ronald Reagan had hoped would forge a national consensus for a long-range approach to the region.

The action came as Secretary of State George P. Shultz, confronting bipartisan Senate concern about human rights in El Salvador, said he would be prepared "as a last resort" to cut off all U.S. aid there if death squad activity and official corruption cannot be halted. "In the end, they must know we are willing to walk away," Mr. Shultz told the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Foreign Operations. But he added that the United States should assess the situation with "patience and common sense" before resorting to that "ul-

U.S. Asked to Ban Some Painkillers New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - A panel of made by Hughes employees on government time and installed in experts convened by the National Institutes of Health has urged that the homes of the employees and at "serious consideration" be given to banning nonprescription use of painkillers that contain two or more active compounds. The most widely sold painkillers of this type, which combine aspirin and acetaminophen, include Excedrin and Vanquish. The panel warned Wednesday that people who took large doses of such drugs for long periods — for example, 10 tablets a day for three years could develop a form of kidney disease. Very heavy and sustained use, they said, could also increase a user's susceptibility to cancer.

The panel, acknowledging that result of painkiller abuse was rare, restricted its inquiry to over-thecounter medicines. It did not address the question of whether such compound painkillers should be allowed by prescription.

South Africa, Mozambique Unveil Outline of Security Pact

By Alan Cowell

New York Times Service CAPE TOWN -- South Africa and its Marxist neighbor, Mozam-bique, announced Friday that they had "agreed on the principal fea-tures of a nonaggression and good-neighborlisses." neighborliness agreement" and would establish a joint commission to oversee its implementation.

The joint announcement by the South African foreign minister. R.F. Botha, and the Mozambican есоломіс affairs minister, General Jacinto Veloso, represented a fur-ther sign of the fragile truce between Pretoria and its black-ruled ucighbors.

The main thrust of the agreement is that it will provide that neither of the two countries will serve as a base for acts of aggression or violence against one another," the announcement said.

The accord would also prevent the two ideologically opposed na-tions from using third countries as intermediaries for subversion.

Final details of the treaty would be worked out later, the announcement said.

The statement was read in English by Mr. Botha and in Portuguese by General Veloso at a joint press conference. It came one day after the announcement that a commission set up by South Africa and Angola had begun monitoring the withdrawal of South African troops from Angola.

Both Mozambique and Angola have been forced to deal with Pretoria by a combination of direct South African military attacks and harrassment by rebellious armies supported by South Africa.

The plan to sign a nonaggression zambique's decision to give up its treaty was announced Feb. 20, overt support for the ANC's activiwhen Mr. Botha flew to Maputo, the Mozambican capital, and met with President Samora Machel and other officials. General Veloso held

They took no part in the opposition to South Africa's December incursion into southern Angola, although they were reported to have been involved in operations last November against Jonas Savimbi's UNITA force, a South-African backed Angolan rebel group.

It is unlikely that their presence falls within the scope of the Angolan-South African security pact that was signed last month with U.S. mediation. Training will continue as long as recruits keep coming in, as they have done in large numbers since the series of black township rebellions in 1976.

Now, with the Mozambique become more difficult to mount spectacular operations such as attacks on power and police stations within South Africa. ANC leaders also fear that Pretoria will try to reduce the organization's influence while attempt to prop up the black homelands that are recognized only by South Africa.

The congress also has serious rivals in South Africa, such as the Black Consciousness Movement and the Pan-African Congress. Both of them refuse white mem bers, unlike the ANC.

But the organization's most reliable ally is the policy of apartheid itself: Pass laws, forced removals, mass dependence on migrant labor, frequent shootings of children all contribute to tension in South Africa's black community.

A laconic African nationalist characterized the recent events as "just part of the ups and downs of the liberation struggle." This par-ticular "down" looks like it will be a long one, while the warriors of the Spear of the Nation sharpen their blunted weapons.

SANTA MONICA, California - Jackie Coogan, 69, who in Char-lie Chaplin's "The Kid" became the first child movie star and who was known to later audiences as Uncle Fester in television's "The Addams Family," died Thursday after a heart attack.

His childhood salary topped $22,000 a week, but his greatest impact on the motion picture industry may have come in 1938, when a lawsuit seeking to recover his squandered fortune from his mother and stepfather led to passage of a law popularly known as the "Coogan Act.

Born Oct. 24, 1914, in Los Angeles, Jack Leslie Coogan was the son of vaudevillians. He made his first screen appearance at the age of 18 months in "Skinner's Baby.

Then came "Johnny, Get Your Hair Cut," in 1927, when Jackie's curls, the final insignia of child-

The Pedicabs of Jakarta Are Rolling Along a One-Way Street to Oblivion

JAKARTA — The becak, a pedicab that is the poor man's taxi in Indonesia, is coming to the end of the road and will be banned from the treets of Jakarta next year.

The becak, which seats two persons and is pedaled from behind, once ruled this city's avenues and provided income for tens of thousands of drivers and their families. But a city law is forcing it out of the bustling city to the back streets and suburbs.

The leisurely becaks have several merits—they are quiet, cheap, easily maintained and they do not pollute. But officials consider them a menace in Jakarta's chaotic traffic and a betrayal of the city smodern image. The becak trade also draws an influx of unskilled laborers into Jakarta. a Barefoot becak drivers are no strangers to police licensing raids, and thousands of their vehicles have been confiscated and piled high in the city's becak graveyard. About 16.00 millionised becaks are to be confiscated in the next phase of the operations and the 8.000 legal ones will be given permits only until the end of this year, the police say.

Inevitably, the section of Korean art best represented is that of ceramics. Starting with the Three Kingdoms pots of hard gray unglazed clay, the show continues with United Silla dynasty (668-935) wares, which were influenced by the Tang pottery of China. After these are the wares of the Korvo dynasty (918-1392) which saw, in the 10th and 11th centuries, the advent of Korean celadons. Treasures From Korea.

Prague Opens a Smetana Cycle

By Andrew Clark International Herald Tribune

PRAGUE — Given the musical world's penchant for anniversaries, the Czech school of composers has given this year's artistic policy-makers a readymade program. By a happy coincidence, Leos Janacek was born 130 years ago, Bedrich Smetana died 100 years ago, Antonin Dvorak died 80 years ago and Bohuslav Martinu died 25 years ago.

The flowering of Czech music over the last 100 years follows a period of Czech cultural assertiveness in the latter half of the 19th century, when German influences began to be challenged and Czech composers developed their individual language — often spiced with traditional folk culture. In a European context, the number of Czech works that form a regular part of the orchestral, instrumental and operatic repertoire remains small. In Prague, however, enthusiasm for such music knows no bounds, and it tends to overshadow the standard German repertoire. Given the encouragement that the state gives to contemporary composers in Czechoslo-valcia — the kind of official support and recognition that Western composers dream about — there is evidently a strong desire to maintain this tradition, even if the price is limited contact with international misical cross-currents.

The instrumental tradition also shows no sign of flagging. There are no exclusive associations with serious music-making here — it has always been a popular and masculine art. The most striking feature m Prague's musical life for any visitor, therefore, is the linge demand for musical events, including contemporary ones, and the quality of tone and ensemble in the city's many instrumental groups, from the four major orchestras down to the smallest chamber group. By contrast, standards of singing are low, often characterized by metallic tone and the Slavic throb, and the quality of dramatic representation in opera is underdeveloped.

The anniversary celebrations this year are being exploited to the full Janacek's opera "Jenufa" has been given a restudied production at the National Theater, a newly restored building that combines the monumental and the intimate, and is a lasting symbol of Czech cultural awareness at the time of its opening a century ago. Another Janacek opera, "The Cunning Little Vixen," can be seen in a production that brings out the work's appeal for all age groups. Over at the Smetana Theater (which until the end of World War II was Prague's German Theater), Martinu's opera "The Greek Passion" can be seen in a new production conducted by the talented young music director of the Prague Symphony, Jiri Belohlavek.

Martinu's ballet "Spalicek" is also being shown. Dvorak's operas "Rusalka" and "The Jacobin" are alongside Smetena's "The Bartered Bride" - the most popular works in the repertoire here; both productions have evocative, naturalistic decor, but illustrate the unwillingness of Czech stage directors to explore the psychological and dramatic potential of opera. Dworak is also being commemorated in a special concert at the Palace of Culture at the end of March, for which the doyen of Czech conductors, Vaclav Smetacek, is coming out of retirement.

But the composer revered above all others is Smetana, whose reputation in the West is largely confined to "The Bartered Bride" and the symphonic cycle of "My Country." The Czech Philharmonic has been exploring some of his lesser-known symphonic works. The National Theater has opened a cycle of his eight operas, all of which will be performed at this year's Spring Festival, including the fragment of his final,

The main work in the cycle so far has been "Libuse," a paean to the Czech homeland that is reserved for special occasions and has hardly been heard out-side Czechoslovakia, Smetana held back its first performance for the opening of the National Theater in 1881, by which time he was too deaf to hear it. Describing "Libuse," Smetana said it was "not an opera of the old type, but a festive tablean." Set in the Bohemian mountains, the work unfolds in six scenes. depicting the peaceful resolution of conflict in pagan times and the founding of a Czech royal dynasty, and foretelling a heroic destiny for the Czech people.

Musically, the opera has several attractive motifs and occasional striking scenes, such as the opening fanfare, the solemn processionals and an extended have been processionals. lyric baritone solo in an evocative pastoral setting. But there are too many passages where not even Smetana's warm-blooded orchestration can hide a lack of inspiration or memorability. The work's suitability for the stage is limited by its simple narrative structure, which is one-dimensional, lacks the psychological depth to act as a parable of human nature, and misses the interplay of character and subtlety of dramatic situation that make good theater.

Many works of art that take their inspiration from a narrow base such as nationalism have universal qualities that make their reinterpretation fascinating. However well Smetana rose to that challenge in his other work, he did not succeed with "Libuse."

The production, which can be seen through May, is simple and unpretentious, with representational scenery by the distinguished Czech designer Josef Svo-boda. But the stage director, Karel Jernek, has given the production a visual flatness by failing to delineate individual character sufficiently. As a result, the performance is imbued with a spartan atmosphere that becomes tedious, and lacks the imaginative flair to realize the potential of scenes like the final tableau, where Libuse, the Bohemian queen, has visions of the future...

One compensating feature is the enthusiasm and pride of the chorus and soloists. And the triumph of the performance is the incisive and full-bodied orchestral contribution under Zdenek Kosler, the company's music director, who showed a talent for delving into the character of the score.

By Michael Gibson International Herald Tribune

PARIS — Seven years ago Alain Kirili, 38, (a native of Burgundy, an old province of France marked by a full-bodied, sensuous culture). was a young sculptor impressed and no doubt rather intimidated by the stern and triumphant minimalism of American art. Sol LeWitt. Carl André and others. Under that influence he produced spare sculptures made of straight, stainlesssteel wire that could fairly be described as austere.

But seven years ago, too, Kirili moved to New York, where he found a studio downtown, on White Street, and in due course a dealer (Reana Sonnabend) who took an interest in his work. Now he is back in Paris on a visit, for his first show here since he moved, a rotund, lively man bubbling with insights acquired over the years. The intimidation that he originally felt in presence of contemporary American art - it struck him then as a sort of absolute formulation of modernity — has given way to a friendly understanding of its connection with the mentality of the country that produced it. He discovered that the austerity of minimalism was not the rational absolute it seemed to be, viewed from the far side of the ocean, but that it was rooted in the austerity of a fundamentally puritan mentality titles themselves seem to confirm such an interpretation.

"You've got to be tough!" young New York artists were constantly telling him, "or you'll never make it!" Toughness was not exactly what characterized an artist in his view. But this, as he sees it, was a direct expression of specifically American notions of virility and femininity that he was also discovering then and which, he says, find such a impressive expression in American art.

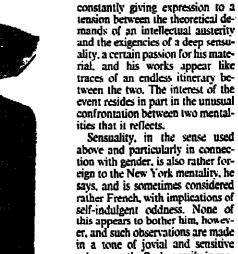

Kirili's reaction to New York was enthusiastic, for one thing because the move allowed him to dising from the sixth century, and dislifted him out of the provincialism that comes, not from belonging to a place, but from being unaware of Packche, one of the original Three what such a belonging implies. To-day he feels that he has understood the strong work done in the United States since the 1950s and he is no longer intimidated by it. He has, on the contrary, found a way to give expression to his own roots in a contemporary idiom, although it was not easy, he says, to gain acceptance for it.

The Protestant work and sex ethic still bemuse him. Artists in New book, an "Illuminated Avatamsaka York were constantly talking about sutra" written and illustrated in their "work," he says, a term (and gold and paper dyed blue-black, subject) that European artists do dating from the middle of the 14th not tend to use. This, in his view, is a barrier that the major American artists of this century have had to transperse at great cost, along with artists of this century have had to transgress at great cost, along with that constituted by the dominant notion of womanhood.

Kirili was impressed by the way this notion is reflected in the work of David Smith, the American sculptor he most admires, for instance in "Specter of Mother" (1946), which, Smith himself ex-robustness (he flushes easily in moments of enthusiasm or pleasure). Kirili is happy about his move and finds New York a place with a tremendous capacity for receiving the vast and useful mass of unmem-orable work, the indispensable compost, in his opinion, that allows work of superior quality to emerge. This in itself explains, in his view, the vitality of American art today. And how does the Paris art scene strike him, returning after a long absence? "Too tame and cautious! he says with a cordial laugh. The reflection does not refer to the art being produced here, but to the social climate that he considers does not provide the fostering enviconment that art demands.

Trudeau's Departure

deau, during his long tenure in Canada, was an event that never happened. Quebec never se-ceded from the country, and Canada never broke into independent fragments. It could have happened very easily at any of several points in the 1970s, when Quebec nationalism was strongly on the rise. If Canada had had a less skillful and less determined prime minister, perhaps it would have happened.

Mr. Trudeau now takes his leave with the satisfaction of knowing that the threat of separatism is not likely to revive. It was generated in the special circumstances of a political awakening in French Canada, and national legislation on language and civil rights has met some of the French Canadians' grievances. A separatist government came to power in Que-bec itself, enacted much legislation there, and four years ago pushed the question of sovereignty to a referendum. The people of Quebec voted against it by a substantial majority, and the idea has never regained much momentum. On the contrary, a slow drift of businesses and investment away from the province, reflecting political uncertainty, has reminded voters there of the price that separation would exact in terms of jobs and incomes.

Canada's next prime minister will have to undertake a different kind of national reconciliation. In his long struggle to hold English and French Canada together, Mr. Trudeau resorted to tactics that frequently divided east from west. He sought to bind together the two most heavily populated provinces, Quebec and Ontario, and to build his parliamentary majority on his Liberal Party's strength there.

That frequently meant policies that favored urban populations and industrial economies. And it evoked resentment elsewhere, particularly in the west. In all of the vast expanse from the western edge of Ontario to the Pacific, Liberals currently hold only two seats.

In political careers it is often true that the triumphs fade while the setbacks and wounds are cumulative. Mr. Trudeau has been prime minister of Canada for an extraordinarily long time — since 1968, with one brief interruption. There have been five American presidents in the White House since he first took office. Mr. Trudeau is leaving now because all of the signs, including polls, commentary and politicians' warnings, say he cannot win the election that must be held within the year.

He has accomplished the most important part of the job that he set out to do. By announcing his resignation now he gives his party good time to choose a successor to take it into the next campaign, presumably next fall, and beyond that, to take Canada into a new stage of its political history.

A Time to Stand Off

As The Economist warns with cousinly affection, how Americans now think about the Middle East may be more important than anything they recently tried to do there. The British journal begs us not to confuse a punch on the nose with the end of the world - and to distinguish clearly between failing in Beirut and an unfailing commitment to truly vital interests like Israel and oil.

Why do Americans need such obvious advice? Because the Reagan administration, after trying to do good in Lebanon in the worst possible way, is now properly abandoning that mission in an equally clumsy manner. With his jingo friends shouting "disaster," President Reagan cannot bring himself to confess failure or to call a retreat by its proper, dignified name. Yet neither can he find much support from those on the other side, whom he called cowards for urging just such a retreat.

What is election-year sport in the United States, however, can be alarming to its allies and vastly more damaging than anything that Having taken that blow on the nose, America cannot afford either Mr. Reagan's fumbling evasions or his critics' denigrations of U.S. power. He sent the marines to Lebanon for numane and defensible reasons: to give its factions a chance to form a coalition, end a ghastly civil war and avert total domination by Syria. Now he has withdrawn them for equally mane and sensible reasons: The Lebanese feuds and Syria's influence were simply too great for the influence that the United States could prudently bring to bear. Mr. Reagan has talked foolishly but acted wisely. The reverse would have been infinitely worse. To recover his balance, he now needs to understand that butting out of some situations can be just as firm a policy as butting in. He was comfortably clear warning Iraq and Iran against interfering with Western oil tankers in the Strait of Hormuz: "There's no way that we could allow that channel to be closed." U.S. ships have fired a few warning shots to stress the point. But what is required elsewhere is aloofness, the opposite of intervention.

Although Mr. Reagan contends that he is not finished in Lebanon and might even send the marines back, his State Department pur-sues the more appropriate policy. America's diplomats will cease behaving as if Lebanon's independence and order are more important to them than to the Lebanese.

The Lebanese will now either collaborate with Arab mediators to gain a bit of independence from Syria or see their nation dismembered. Partition should not disturb Washing-ton. As Syria's influence spreads west, Israel's will be anchored in the south and the two will keep a respectful distance, as they have or several years.

The remaining danger is that doing nothing more on the Lebanese front will tempt the Reagan administration into damaging exertions on another. Egypt, Jordan and Saudi Arabia are already pressing for recognition of a "new" Yasser Arafat, supposedly a convert to the Reagan plan for a West Bank deal. But Level it is above of the reagan plan for a West Bank deal. But Israel is in shock after its Lebanon failures and not about to let a divided PLO turn the West Bank into another free-fire zone. The Reagan plan, or any Arab-Israeli accord, must now wait for significant political changes throughout the region. The less America interferes, the faster some of those changes may occur.

Treat Manila With Care

The single issue that has most vexed American foreign policy since World War II is sharpening again, this time in respect to the Philip-pines. Should the United States hold tight to a friendly and anti-communist but exceedingly imperfect, authoritarian and vulnerable regime in the Third World? Or should it try to beat the odds favoring its eventual collapse by trying to nudge it toward a more popular, flexible and, one hopes, stable form of rule? And can the nudging process itself be kept from aggravating the very condition of instability it means to treat?

In the case of the Philippines, American policy has shown an evident care. After the opposition leader Benigno S. Aquino Jr. was sassinated last year, conceivably with at least some official complicity, President Reagan put off a long-scheduled visit to Manila, thereby denying President Ferdinand E. Marcos a much-sought show of support. Since then, American diplomacy has sought to reinforce Philippine efforts to restore some measure of democratic politics: by making the legislative elections planned for next May a more fit vehicle for the channeling of discontent into a political process, and by ensuring that Mr. Marcos's successor be someone accountable to the people. Washington is further undertaking to dampen the tinder by helping the Philip pines deal with its anxious foreign creditors. The Philippine opposition is pushing the inquiry into the Aquino assassination, and pushing it ever closer to President Marcos's door. His adversaries are warning of the dire consequences of having him continue business as usual, or even stay in power. They are also calling on their American friends to apply more direct pressure on him through aid. The United States promised the Philippines $900 million over five years, as rent for use of major military bases. The House Foreign Affairs Committee has now voted to alter this year's mix of military and economic increments, by providing less on the military side.

The political rationale for this shift is to distance the United States from the Marcos regime; the economic rationale is to provide more money in a category (economic grants) that the Philippines desperately needs. A skillful American diplomacy can no doubt find a certain use for this show of congressional im-patience. At a point, however, bald interven-tion of this sort can backfire: It can make stand-patters appear tough nationalists and thus become a liability to potential reformers. The Philippines is no longer a U.S. colony. It is a sovereign country, a friendly country, with problems but also with pride.

FROM OUR MARCH 3 PAGES, 75 AND 50 YEARS AGO

1909: Washington Gears Up for Taft WASHINGTON - Judge William H. Taft's expansive smile seems even to have stopped the swishes of the "big stick." A peacemaker by nature, he has put everybody in a pleasant frame of mind for the inauguration. The signs multiply that it will be a jubilee, something akin to that which ushered in William McKinley, 12 years ago. Washington is getting a wealth of color for the celebration. Two thousands bluejackets from the fleet, who are on shore duty; the calvary, in yellow, of Troop A of Cleveland, which is to be Judge Taft's es-cort; the brilliant uniforms of Cadets from the Southern States, all commingle within one block on Pennsylvania Avenue. 1934: Newsreels Censored in Chicago CHICAGO - All scenes of mob violence and rioting, including newsreel pictures of the re-cent disorders in Paris and Vienna, have been ordered eliminated from the programs shown by Chicago theatres. This order was made at the request of Mayor Edward J. Kelly, who feared that the sight of the disturbances might incite Chicago Communists to follow the ex-ample of their brethren across the seas. Theatre owners obeyed the orders and the scenes were eliminated, but they pointed out that the censoring order applied to the film companies rather than the exhibitors. # Reagan Goes His Own Way on Space

EW YORK — On Jan. 21, the U.S. Air Force successfully tested the rocketry of a new antisatellite weapon. banning weapons in space?
No, says the Reagan administration, such a treaty would not be verifiable. Yes, say numerous scien-usts and arms control experts, a treaty is feasible and advisable.

But the administration is going its own way. As George Keyworth, the president's science adviser, said: "If we could conceive of a treaty with the Soviet Union that was truly verifiable ... that would be one issue. [But] it is an almost impossible thing to do in space."
This conclusion is so sharply at variance with other authorities that it gives rise to the suspicion voiced by the National Council of the Federation of American Scientists in a November 1983 report: "It is difficult to avoid the impression that the administration is simply not interested in an arms control option in this area and in-tends to proceed with deployment, fighter and launched at high alti-tude, this weapon can take out a Soviet satellite up to an altitude of 2700 miles (4.370 kilometers).

Office this easily concealable weapon is operational, the Russians could have little confidence in their spility to verify a ban on its deploy-ment at that point, they probably would withdraw the draft treaty they have already offered at the United Nations and would pro-ceed in the old familiar arms race pattern, to try to match the superior U.S. weapon.

That is why now is the time — before the U.S. weapon's heat-seek-ing warhead has been proved in tests scheduled later this year — for the United States to accept the So-viet challenge put by Yuri Andro-pov last August for a moratorium on anti-satellite testing. Negotia-tions for a treaty banning such weapons could follow. But the Reagan administration appears dead set against this course.

The main reason probably is not the Soviet threat, minor as it is, or the utility of the U.S. weapon, for which the federation believes there are limited targets, or even the de-sire to outdo the Russians; rather. the administration's cherished Space Defense Initiative (the socalled Star Wars missile defense) includes ground-based laser and space-based surveillance systems, both of which are technically antisatellite weapons. Thus a treaty banning anti-satellite weapons probably would ban important parts of the Star Wars scheme.

Fortunately, the Air Force can-not proceed with the crucial test of the U.S. anti-satellite weapon, pitting it against a target in space, until the administration certifies to Congress that it is engaged in a "good faith" effort to negotiate limitations on such weapons with the Soviet Union. Since not even token negotiations are now planned, Mr. Reagan's ability to evade this rerement of the 1984 Defense Authorization Bill may well determine whether outer space, too, will be engulfed in earthly folly.

of new ideas," and his surprise vic-tory in New Hampshire gives him the aura of something wholly new on the policial scene. But he is only the lates in a line of Democratic presi-dential candidates who have taken a similar stance on issues, a line that goes back at least to Eugene McCarthy and includes Jimmy Carter and

Jerry Brown.
All these candidates have been more liberal on cultural and foreign issues than other Democrats, and more conservative on economics; all have had particular appeal to the young affluent voters of the baby boom. You might call them the Trend Democrats. As their showings in presidential primaries for 16 years indicate, there is a healthy market for such candidates in primaries against what might be called Traditional Democrats, who are typically conservative on cultural and foreign issues and more willing to spend money domestically.

The continued success of Trend candidates spotlights the well-known problem of Traditional Democrats: in an affluent nation, more and more voters see themselves as those who pay for generous government programs rather than those who benefit grams rather than those who was information. And more and more people, especially the young, are interested in liberating themselves from the restraints of traditional mores rather than honoring them.

But does the Trend program work any better as a way of governing? That question is raised not only by the failure of candidacies such as those of Mr. McCarthy and Mr. Brown, but also by the inability of the Carter administration to govern successfully. After two and a half years in office, the best the Carter presidency could come up with was a procla-mation of "malaise" — inspired in large part by the polister Parick Caddell, who is now advising Mr. Hart.

Trend Democrats have been good at articulating complaints about things as they are, and about the Traditional Democrats' programs. But they are not quite as good at running things themselves.

The first is that Trend Democracy The first is that Trend Democracy too easily becomes a politics of protest for protest's sake. Mr. Hart has his own proposals for cutting deficits—proposals not that much different from Walter Mondale's. But in discussing that issue he quickly switches to denunciations of "the old establishment" and asks, "Is it any wonder that Americans have lost confidence. that Americans have lost confidence in the political process?"

This restatement of the malaise theme misses the fact that confidence in U.S. political institutions and polincians is rising, not falling; whatever else you may think about Ronald Reagan, he has proved that politi-cians can make a difference. Malaise may help an outsider candidate win primaries in the out party. But it will not help him govern.

The second danger of Trend Democratic politics is that it can easily degenerate into a politics of seifish ness rather than generosity, of liberation rather than obligation. Mr. Hart's program would cut deficits without raising taxes greatly, except on a seemingly small number of rich on a secundary status thanks to from the vast affluent middle class, thank you. We are to solve foreign problems without U.S. intervention in Lebanon or Grenada or Central America or just about anywhere else — no need to draft anyone, you see. This is an exaggeration of Mr. Hart's policies - but not by all that much.

Like other politicians, he promises a painless solution for all the country's ills. A case can be made that Trend politics reflects the desire of an unprecedently affluent and well-educated generation to avoid being drafted in a war and to avoid the constraints of traditional mores -and to enjoy at the same time congratulations for their moral courage. Will that inspire a nation?

Mr. Hart could answer, with some justice, that the politics of others is more selfish: that Ronald Reagan is out to help the rich get richer and Walter Mondale to help the well-placed members of the AFL-CIO and National Education Association enjoy their advantages at the expense of he rest of the nation.

But Mr. Reagan can articulate a vision of a nation that stands for freedom and abundance — not a bad reading of American history. And Mr. Mondale can appeal to a tradi-tion of helping the helpless and enzation of deterrence. No doubt the Russians will abling those born without advantages to make their way up in the world. Can Mr. Hart claim that his politics would provide as much incentive to the rich or as much help to the poor? The third danger of Trend politics is more tactical: that it invites terrible disappointment when it is revealed, as it usually is, that the politician who preaching this new gospel has feet of clay. Consider the reaction when George McGovern dumped Thomas Eagleton, or when Jimmy Carter started getting snarled in contradiotions. Gary Hart proudly proclaims his support for free trade and his opposition to the so-called domestic content bill sought by the AFL-CIO. But not so long ago, before it was clear the unions would endorse Walter Mondale, Mr. Hart was waffling uncomfortably on this issue. Or consider Central America. He now is a strong opponent of U.S. intervention in any form. Yet in an interview with The Washington Post in 1982 he wobbled all over on the issue.

Better things can be said for Mr. Hart's record. He notably refused to play the demagogue on the nuclear power issue during the Three Mile Island crisis when, as chairman of a critical subcommittee, he could easily have done so — and won points with many young Americans. He has pro-posed a nuclear freeze on plutonium and a creative job-training program. (These may not prove practical, but they do address key problems: the danger of nuclear proliferation, and the need to upgrade the skills of the large number of people who entered the labor force in low-skill jobs in the late 1970s.) His proposals for military reform are specific and interesting

For the moment, the focus is not on these problems but on the tactics of campaigning Dovish Iowa and tight-fisted New Hampshire are hos-pitable to Trend candidates, but the politics of Democratic primary voters in states such as Illinois and Pennsylvania is almost entirely Traditional Nor has there ever been a market for Trend candidates (unless you count Mr. Carter) in the South.

But the question now is not whether Mr. Hart's tactics will work - wt will see soon enough — but whether his particular brand of Trend politics is capable of providing good govern-ment. If not, the Democrats might do better to choose the more Traditional politics of Walter Mondale. -

Mr. Reagan has restored confidence in American resolve and proected American leadership on three fronts: arms control, no-nonsense in-tolerance of Soviet aggression, and an open world economy.

By all leading indicators (except perhaps the deficit), he should win in November. Against Walter Mondale, a victory is more than likely; fewer than four in ten Mondale backers believe that their man can beat Mr. Reagan, according to a Washington Post-ABC poll last month.

But there is a roundhouse punch waiting: Gary Hart. While Mr. Moo-dale is exhausted and John Glenn is reeling Mr. Hart is threatening to become the Jimmy Carter of 1984.

He has done well in Iowa and New Hampshire. As George McGovern 1972 campaign manager, he is likely to receive Mr. McGovern's support when that towel is thrown in.

ECONOMIC SCENE

Lambsdorff Sees 2 Dangers Growing Out of U.S. Policy

By LEONARD SILK

EW YORK — Otto Lambsdorff, West Germany's economics minister, is in the United States, laying the groundwork for a meeting Monday between Chancel-lor Helmut Kohl and President Ronald Reagun.

In an interview in New York, Mr. Lambsdorff made clear that his government is deeply concerned over the harmful effects of U.S. economic policies on his country and many others. He sees two risks stemming from big budget deficits and high interest rates in the United States.

The first is a threat not to West Germany directly but to the developing countries of Latin America, Africa and Asia. "They are our clients," Mr. Lambsdorff said. "Our capital goods exports have been weakened, and the developing countries cannot buy capital equipment if their financial position is worsened." He in Third World warned that the large debts of the Third World countries were bound to increase if U.S. domestic policies kept interest rates high and rising. His second big worry is over the "growing protectionist tendency in the United States." He sees this as being linked to high interest rates, which he said had made the dollar overly strong, undermining the U.S. trade position and other the United States hundreds of thousands of jobs. He fears that protectionism will spread, here and abroad, if the United States does not set its fiscal house in order.

But Mr. Lambsdorff conceded that the extra-strong dollar had been an immediate blessing to the German economy. As noted in the latest issue of the monthly report of the Bundesbank, his country's central bank, West German exporters have profited from the strong economic revival in the United States and "from the fact that their products have been priced very attractively for foreign buyers as a result of the lower valuation of the Deutsche mark against important world currencies, particularly the United States dollar."

Mr. Lambsdorff criticized the Reagan administration and, even more strongly, Congress for yielding to protectionist pressures, especially in the steel sector, as a false and dangerous solution to the trade problem. He warned that the United States is courting retaliation from Europe and he urged positive steps to regain a more "outward-looking" attitude through international Relations between the United States and West Germany have also been strained over U.S. criticism of what it considers an madequate contribution by Europeans to their own defense. Mr. Lambsdorff sharply opposed suggestions — made recently by Lawrence S. Eagleburger, the deputy undersecretary of state for political affairs, and Henry A. Kissinger, former secretary of state — that the United States should reduce its military forces in Europe if the West Germans and others did not spend more on the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Mr. Lambsdorff said he considered Mr. Kissinger's proposal that the next commander of NATO forces be a European and the next secretary-general of NATO be an American as just "making a show." But Chancellor Kohl, disturbed by the critical signals emanating from Washington, is likely to try to reassure Mr. Reagan during his White House visit that he and President François Mitterrand of France intend to bolster their cooperation with the United States and their military self-defense.

The economics minister has a self-defense problem of his own. He has been accused of taking a bribe in the form of a $50,000 contribution for his political party, the Free Democratic Party, from the Flick holding company in exchange for tax waivers of $175,000 on some of its foreign operations.

Mr. Lambsdorff acknowledged that Flick had made the contribution and that the tax break had been granted to Flick. (It has since been withdrawn.) But he said there was no connection that the tax break had been granted to Flick.

between the two actions, that the money was "never given to me" and that there is no evidence against him except that his name was on a list found in Flick's offices.

In the interview, Mr. Lambsdorff maintained his innocence and "good conscience," and he said he intended to "fight my way through." But if he is indicted, as expected, in May or June, he will probably be compelled to resign to defend himself in court. Mr. Kohl has assigned Mr. Lambsdorff to the crucial effort to strengthen relations with Washington and, at the same time, demonstrate that West Germany is not a humble or pliant vassal of the United States. In doing so, Mr. Kohl appears to be trying to strengthen his economics minister's position — and his own.

Daewoo, GM Set Car Plan

By Warren Brown

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON — General Motors Corp., and Daewoo Corp., a South Korean conglomerate, tentatively have agreed to produce small cars in South Korea for export to the United States, industry sources

Formal announcement of the greement could come as early as Friday, the sources said.

Daewoo Motor Co., South Korea's second-largest automaker. Under the agreement, Daewoo Motor would build about 200,000 front-wheel-drive cars annually, and about half of them would be shipped to this country.

Neither GM officials nor officials at Daewoo Corp.'s North American headquarters in New York would comment on the record about the plan. But sources in both camps acknowledged that an agreement in principle has been reached, and that GM and Daewoo officials were working on final

The agreement would give Daewoo Motor an entree to the lucrative North American auto market, where South Korea's largest auto maker, Hyundai Motor , already has a presence. Hyundai last December began selling its four-door, rear-wheel-drive Hyundai Pony passenger cars in Canada. The arrangement would give GM another inexpensive supply of cars to fight the small-car wars at home. GM officials have said they need an annual supply of at least 1 million small cars to ensure their company's presence in that seg-ment of the U.S. market. But they say they don't have the time, the money — or the expertise — to go it alone in developing, building and selling that many small cars for U.S. consumption.

GM, as a result, has adopted a so-called Japanese strategy which might now be called its Asian strategy. GM and Japan's Toyota Motor Corp. — under an agreement subject to final approval by the Federal Trade Commission plan to build as many as 250,000 small cars annually at a former CM plant in Fremont, California. The GM-Toyota cars would be sold under the Chevrolet nameplate.

U.S. Firms Are Limiting Inventories

By Winston Williams - New York Times Service

CHICAGO - If the customary rhythms of the U.S. business cycle held sway today, manufacturers and retailers would be ordering more materials than they need just yet and turning out more widgets than they can sell right away. Inventory building, a stage of economic recovery that usually follows closely behind re-vived consumer spending, would be rolling into high gear. But buyers, production man-agers and accountants are apparently out of sync with historical patterns. After more than a year of economic recovery, no substantial inventory building has occurred, although consumer spending is still buoyant and factory production is rising robustly.

Many companies are doggedly adhering to a new self-discipline on inventories made possible by computers and forced on them by recession. The possibility of missing some sales because of inadequate supplies hardly di-minishes the determination.

That means the economy may not get as much of a kick as it usually does from inventory rebuilding. Economists regard the level of inventories as a crucial economic indicator, often referring to stockpiles as "the tail that wags the dog." The shifting attitude on inventories, they say, portends even deeper changes for the U.S. economy.

A more disciplined approach to holding materials could make future recessions less severe because manufacturers and retailers, faced with a drop in sales, would have fewer "excess inventories" to work off. Sparse inventories could also reduce pressure on interest rates by cutting the borrowing needs of business.

Whatever the benefits or costs to the economy, companies have decided that leaner inventories mean fatter profits, and pro-grams to trim stockpiles are pro-liferating across the United

And the change seems permanent. Inventory managers could not return to their old ways even if they wanted to. Advancing technology, like electronic cash registers that make inventory adjustments as sales are rung up, have thrust retailers into another era. So has the high cost of stocking shelves. ### Fraser Plans to Resign From Chrysler Board

By John Holusha.

New York Times Service DETROIT — Douglas A. Fra-ser, the first labor leader to hold a seat on the board of a major U.S. corporation, has said that he will step down as a director of Chrysler

Corp. at the end of his term in June. The decision by the retired president of the United Automobile Workers confronts Lee A. Iacocca, Chrysler's chairman, with the choice of naming Owen F. Bieber, now UAW president, to the seat or risking union anger by choosing someone else or eliminating the

Seoul Bankers Dubious About Legal Changes

By Moon Ihlwan

SEOUL — The government has introduced changes in the banking system in response to recent multimillion-dollar business scandals. but industry sources are not sure the changes will be effective. The steps the Seoul government has so far taken focus more on form than substance, one foreign banker said.

President Chun Doo Hwan's chief economic adviser, Sakong II. said this week that the government was committed to the changes, especially to control lending on the unofficial "curb market."

Finance Ministry officials concede that, during South Korea's economic drive of the past 20 years, fast-developing manufacturing industries benefitted at the expense of the financial sector, with government planners regulating banks to provide key export projects with loans at artificially low rates.

The ministry now says it will let bank shareholders participate in decision-making and permit independent selection of bank employ-

Industry sources say, however, that the most difficult problems South Korean banking faces are corruption, bureaucratic inefficiency and the clandestine curb market, the chief causes of persistent in the latest of a series of scandals, 29 persons, including the former head of the Cho Heung bank and 17 other bank officials, were

Korea, and in 1982 a curb market scheme sent several companies to the brink of bankruptcy.

In a bid to rid South Korea of such schemes, Mr. Chun's government has introduced a law setting a maximum penalty of death for bank officials convicted of taking bribes of more than 20 million won ($25,150). People making more than 5 billion won through fraud, embezzlement or breach of trust could also face death.

The ministry said the scandals were due partly to insufficient bank supervision, so the Office of Bank Supervision and Examination, a watchdog body, was strengthened and made independent of the central bank. Other changes in the banking structure include the transfer of ownership of five city banks into private hands and creation of two new city banks, one a joint venture with the Bank of America.

To prevent bank branches from becoming go-betweens for private moneylenders and to bring capital from the unofficial market into banking channels, a law was passed in December banning anonymous accounts and those held under assumed names, starting in 1986.

Until then, holders of such accounts will have to pay higher income tax than those with accounts under their real name Government officials call the measures revolutionary, but many foreign bankers say market mechanisms, not government, should be allowed to control the industry.

"To vitalize the banking industry, you need more drastic measures, such as liberalizing bank rates," one foreign banker said. The government, which sets the rates, is not likely to give up this sentenced this week to up to 15 years for illegally issuing promissory notes valued at more than $200 million. In December, 22 persons, including a former cabinet minister, eight government officials and the head of the Myung Sung group, were convicted in a similar scandal involving the Commerce Bank of control soon, as the tightness of capital would send interest rates soaring, ruining the government's top-priority policy of minimizing inflation, industry sources said. ### BP Planning to Sell 6.4% Stake in Amax

By Bob Hagerty

LONDON — British Petroleum Co. said on Friday that it plans to sell its 6.4-percent stake in Amax Inc., the loss-plagued U.S. minerals company, in a transaction likely to exceed $100 million.

BP is required to sell the stake by a 1981 agreement with the U.S. Federal Trade Commission, That agreement gives Amax, which had a loss of $489 million last year, the right of first refusal.

Amax has 60 days to decide whether to accept the BP offer. A spokesman said the company is considering the matter.

If Amax does not accept the offer, BP said it intends to sell the shares either to Standard Oil Co. of California, which already has a 19.5-percent shareholding in Amax, or to Salomon Brothers Inc., the New York investment bank. A Socal spokesman confirmed that the company may buy the BP stake, which would raise Socal's stake to about 26 percent. But he said Socal does not intend to raise its stake much beyond that level. BP said its stake, totaling 4.3 million shares, would be sold to Socal at the average stock market price over a 30-day period, subject to certain conditions. If those conditions were not seen as the conditions were not seen ditions were not met and Socal declined to buy the shares, BP would sell them to Salomon.

Amax shares rose 75 cents apiece Friday on the New York Stock Ex-change, closing at $26.625. At that level, the BP stake would total about $116 million, and Amax's entire share capital would be valued at around $1.8 billion.

BP recently lost an appeal to the U.S. government to overturn the requirement that the stake be sold. The FTC agreement dates from the 1981 purchase of Kennecott Corp. by Standard Oil Co. (Ohio), 53 percent of which is owned by BP. Be-both companies. Socal bought its Amax stake in 1975. In 1982, the oil company pro posed a merger, but Amax's board veloed the idea. One leading New York mineral-share analyst said that Socal recently has conceded privately that the purchase of a large stake in Amax was "a gross mistake" and that the oil company has sought to sell the shares.

Analysis doubted that the accord with BP had any bearing on Socal's possible interest in acquir-ing Gulf Oil Corp. Socal has re-fused to comment on widespread reports that it is interested in buying Gulf, but George Keller, Socal's chairman, visited Pittsburgh this week, presumably for talks with Gulf.

NEW YORK - Gulf Oil Corp. has called a special board meeting for Monday in what could be the first step in formally weighing an amicable takeover bid, sources said Friday. In Pittsburgh, a Gulf spokesman would not confirm nor deny the report. Kuwait's state-owned petroleum company, which has a major stake in Gulf, may enter the bidding and offer to buy Gulf's U.S. gasoline marketing network. David Miz-rahi, editor of the MidEast Report, said Thursday.

THE DEATH OF CHE GUEVARA

Knopf, 201 East 50 Street, New York,

T is a bold and ambitious project that Jay Cantor has undertaken in his unusual first novel, "The Death of Che Guevara" - to reconstruct the career of the Argentine-born revolutionary out of histori-cal documents, the overwhelming majority of which the author has invented. But as early as page five of the nearly 600-page story, the narrator — or, more precisely, the intelligence that presides over the construction of the narration - calls our attention

Well, that was a little premature for this reader who wasn't quite yet getting restless for lack of a hero. But it wasn't more than a couple of hundred pages later that I began to experience the fatal symptoms, not so much for lack of a hero as for anyone or anything to be truly interested in. Certainly it wasn't any of the spear carriers who surround the monumental figure of Guevara — not even Fidel Castro or Régis Debray, both of whom are presented in a somewhat morally ambiguous light, or Che Guevara's parents, who, while extremely interesting, are swept off stage rather early in the going.

As for Che Guevara himself, Cantor, being an obviously sophisticated student of history, has tak-en great care to lay the psychological foundation for his hero's fanatic revolutionary character. He portrays him as a hysterical asthmatic (perhaps the result, if asthma can ever be said to have psychologi-mother), as well as the victim of violent Oedipal feelings that have been aggravated by his mother's seductiveness and his father's competitiveness.

Some readers, of course, may find considerable appeal in this portrait of the man who was, after all. the charismatic revolutionary figure of the 1960s, and may follow with sympathy his endless and frustrating struggle to persuade the poor and ignorant of Bolivia that they represent an international revolutionary vanguard whose interests are reflected by Vietnam's so-called struggle against imperial-ism. There are even touches of comedy in some of the scenes where Guevara tests the blade of his ideology against the stones of ancient Inca supersti-

But the appeal of Cantor's Guevara is finally a matter of taste and temperament. In a concluding section, also called "Dates," the revolutionary theorist Debray analyzes revolutionary conflict as follows: "It is not individuals who are placed face to face in these battles, but class interests and ideas; but those who fall in them, those who die, are persons, are men. We cannot avoid this contradiction, escape from this pain." Some readers of "The Death of Che Guevara" will be more susceptible to

The documents that form "The Death of Che Guevara" have mostly been invented, they represent the end product of artistic activity, and therefore, instead of inviting us to select and create, they force us to accept them in a comparatively passive state of mind. To put it more bluntly, they imped the mind to mander. One of the please it was described. mind to wander. One of the places it wanders is to the irresistible conclusion that Cantor has been infected by such novelists as James Joyce and Her-man Melville.

"I'm not interested in whales," says Che Guevara in one of the novel's less subtle scenes, when his companion invites him to read "Moby Dick" and Cantor thereby begins the bludgeoning of his readers with comparisons of Guevara to Captain Ahab, as well as to Satan, Jonah and other literary figures. But Cantor is fatally drawn to leviathans, and in the belly of his beast the going gets pretty tedious.

Scotland Seeks a Triple Crown Irish Game Could End 46 Years of Rugby Frustration

By Bob Donahue

International Herald Trivene PARIS -- Only France, Scotland and England remain in contention for this year's Five Nations rugby title after the first three of the annual round-robin tournament's five rounds. If Saturday's fourth round goes as expected. France will kill England's title hopes in Paris.

In Dublin, to quote from an ag-gressive whiskey ad, it will be "Irish on the one hand. Scotch on the other." The Irish advertisement 20es on to claim victory in a "simple test." More likely in the rugby test is victory for Jim Aitken's Scots - in which event, the title and also the grand slam (a fourmatch sweep) will be at stake when France plays in Edinburgh on March 17

The Dublin match has the added interest of offering Scotland its first triple crown — a sweep against three British Isles teams — since 1938. The Scots opened with a 15-9 defeat of Wales in Cardiff on Jan. 21 and beat England, 18-6, in Edinburgh on Feb. 4. After sitting out the third Saturday they are favor-ites to leave Ireland at the bottom of the standings with four losses.

The so-called triple crown does not exist physically as a trophy but has existed as a competition among the four British Isles rugby communities since the 1880s. It survived as a four-team tournament within the Five Nations tournament after France's arrival on the international scene in 1906.

There have been 16 triple crown winners since World War II: Wales nine times, England four and Ireland three. (France has beaten three British Isles teams in the same season 14 times during that period.) But for Scots, as one of them from the celebrating - Irish in one hand, Scotch in the other. Meanwhile, a feature of this year's play has been the failure of England and Ireland to score tries. Worse, England's backs have managed only one try since March 1982. French backs have amassed 24 tries in the two years.

The goal-kicking of Dusty Hare - who now sets an English career record against major countries with his 20th appearance at fullback is one English argument. The scrummaging of 230-pound prop Phil Blakeway and the lineout jumping of 6-foot-7 lock Steve Bainbridge are others. Rain, forecast as a possibility in a blustery cold spell, could be another.

But France seems to be on an upward curve. Confidence has rown during an unbeaten streak that started against Australia and Romania in the fall and continued with a 25-12 defeat of Ireland in Paris on Jan. 21 and a 21-16 victory over Wales on Feb. 18. That was since 1968, but celebrating was restrained by determination to stay fit enough for the grand slam.

Pierre Dospital, a Basque weight-lifting champion, has been brought back to prop against Blakeway. On Thursday the forwards devoted two training sessions almost entirely to lineouts. A common view is that England cannot win unless it starves France of possession. But Wales managed it in Cardiff and lost anyhow.

That was largely the doing of 22year-old Jean-Patrick Lescarboura. His 34 points from kicks in two matches — each time equaling the of seemingly eternal frustration." French record of 17 in a major Frenchman, looking ahead to a international - put him on the way grand slam, are hoping Scotland to breaking the record of 52 points will win in Dublin and not recover in a Five Nations campaign set last

In Cardiff, especially, they demonstrated in the process that they are an effective defensive unit as well.

Young English fans added an intangible factor to a complex rugby formula when they rampaged in Paris before and after Wednesday night's France-England soccer match. (England lost, 2-0.) Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher called it "appulling," Mayor Jacques Chirae of Paris said Friday he was "fed up with British fans." All this acrimony could increase French ardor and English inhibition in the rugby forwards' hattle for possession of the ball Saturday.

VIENNA (UPI) - Karl Schranz, a former world downhill champion, has been proposed as new manager for the Austrian national ski team as a result of Austria's failure to win a gold medal at last month's Winter Olympic Games in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia.

Andreas Steiner, president of the Tyrolean Ski Federation, suggested this week that Schranz should take over as top manager to replace Sepp Sulzberger, who was described as "too weak" by Steiner.

Steiner, heading the largest and most important ski federation in Austria, told a news conference he also wanted downhill coach Karl Kahr to be ousted together with the women's coach Kurt Hoch, who has aiready offered his resignation. "Both Kahr and Hoch did not fulfil their duties," Steiner said. "Their preparation of our skiers for Sajarevo was

P HOENIX, Arizona - Alter years of worry, Arizona is try-ing to do something no other parched Western state has ever tried to do before: Stop using water faster than it is replaced by nature

Making that decision in a region whose water philosophy for 100 years has been to "get it, use it and worry about it later" was a milestone. Managing to make it work will be another.

The Groundwater Management Act, passed in 1980, set the broad goal of cutting the state's per capita water consumption in half by 2025, mainly by reducing agricultural and horticultural consumption.

Per capita water use in Arizona varies widely from one area to another. Residents of Phoenix. who draw water from the Salt River project, consume 267 gal-lons (about 1,000 liters) per capi-ta per day, while Tucsonians, who rely entirely on wells, use only 160 gallons. Under the management plan. Phoenix's consumption is to be reduced by 10 percent by 1990, and both cities must reduce per capita consumption to 140 gallons by 2025.

The first management plan un-der Arizona's Groundwater Management Act, for the first time imposing restrictions according to ways of living on water use by municipalities and developers. was recently released in draft form, and the complaints are coming in from the state's diverse water-using interests.

"I have a real great fear that unless we take another look at these rules they're talking about we may end up hurting the life-styles and aesthetic values that are important to us," said Leonard Ducker, the head of the Municipal Water Users Association, made up of Phoenix and its sub-urbs in the Salt River Valley. Protest was loud when the Water Resources Department declared that it wanted to start reducing the greenery. Arizona has made a major industry of golf and suntans, but Ducker and other Arizonans originally from greener regions are loath to lose such reminders of home.

In its proposed management plan, the department said that after a certain date golf courses could no longer be all grass; that private pools could not exceed a certain very large size; that private decorative ponds and lakes, a major prestige item in real estate developments here, could no longer be dug, and that beginning next July highway medians may no longer be covered with grass. This is the first of five management plans that will impose progressively stricter limitations on water use until 2025. We've talked to the golf people, and they can have a nice golf course without all that grass," said W. Don Maughan, deputy director of the Water Resources Department. "People want further growth in Arizona, and the way to do that is to be careonly ful with the water supply."

Arizona shares its problem of declining underground water reserves with a half-dozen other states, including Texas, Nebras-ka, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Florida, none of which has been able to force the issue as far.

The signs of ground water depletion — abandoned farmland Jersey, with one foot of water. in the Pecos Valley of New Mexico, deep rifts in the ground in Arizona, the sinkholes swallow-ing houses in Florida — occur wherever rapid growth in popula-million acres to 800,000 acres.

tion, farming and industry out-other states have tried to cut back. The high plains of Texas between Amarillo and Lubbock have experienced severe ground water depletion, forcing the abandonment of some farmland, but an effort at self-policing water restraints failed to avert the drying up of many wells. In 1979, California proposed a modest plan requiring areas with underground water depletion to monitor the problem and to devise plans for self-restraint within a certain time or the state would step in, but the effort failed to gain the necessary support. Parts of Oklahoma show evidence of severe drops in the level of the Ogalalla aquifer, the un-derground pool of water that stretches from the Dakotas to north Texas, but there is no con-certed effort to balance this with natural recharge of the aquifer. In all these states, the heaviest user of ground water is agriculture, and a striking feature of the Arizona law is a plan to cut back sharply on the $2-billion a-year crops of citrus, alfalfa and cotton that use nine-tenths of the state's well water.

"Part of the problem is that we have a very arid state, yet 89 percent of the water goes to agricul-ture," said Beverly Beddow, the Water Resources Department's spokesman. "We don't want to eliminate agriculture by any means, but perhaps we ought to think we are a little overextended in that direction and that we ought to think about a different

The different approach is to substitute population growth for farming. Without agriculture's drain on water supplies, Arizona would have enough water to support 20 million people instead of running a severe water "deficit" with only 2.8 million people. By 2025, Arizona aims to squeeze enough water out of an-

million acres (1 million hectares). an area about half the size of New The only way to do so, state officials concede, is to cut the nual consumption to cover 2.5
